IN CONVERSATION

WITH D GOVARDAN

Cooking up vacations

Talk of the timeshare industry, and the name Sterling Holidays will automatically come to mind. Arriving on the Indian corporate horizon in the late 1980s, the company was not only the pioneer of this industry, now more popularly known as vacation ownership, but also went on to become a phenomenal brand that araduates aspired to work for. However, too much ambition and a few mistimed ventures brought the juggernaut to the ground, from where it took several years to revive itself. Sterling Holidays is now in the process of being merged with travel company Thomas Cook. Its managing director Ramesh Ramanathan took time off to recall the past and way forward to Financial Chronicle. Edited excerpts from the interview:

Sterling Holiday Resorts once created a benchmark for the hospitality industry in terms of executive salaries and travel nackages in the late 1980s and the in the late 1980s and the mid-1990s. What was it like in those heady days? R Subramanian or RS as he is popularly known, is a visionary. He dared to go where others would hesi-tate to tread! On a vacation in to any homedrown Comtrip to my hometown Coim-batore, RS encouraged me to visit the newly set up Sterling resort at Kodai. It was after this visit that I joined Sterling to head marketing & sales. I experi-enced firsthand the poten-tial of the timeshare indus-try when I saw how a holi-day in a well-planned trip to my hometown Coimday in a well-planned cherished memories and bring families together bring families together. The potential was there but the challenges were im-mense, goading us to set benchmarks in delivering Great Holidays. Remember, we are talking of times when Indian families would only holiday once a year visonly holiday once a year vis-iting friends and relatives (VFR) Sterling believed that holiday patterns could be changed by making timeshare vacations affordtimeshare vacations afford-able. Variety in food and holiday activities were made part of holidays for the first time. No challenge was seen as impossible but instead greeted with a 'we can' attitude. This involved educating the market about educating the market about timeshare (now called vacation ownership) whilst simultaneously investing in infrastructure and human resource skills to deliver memorable holidays.

One of the challenges we took up was the opening of hitherto unknown holiday locales. Sterling was the first to open a major resort in Munnar in the 1990s, at a in Munnar in the 1990s, at a time when Munnar was not on the tourist radar. Today, Munnar is rated as one of the top three holiday desti-nations in Asial There was fun at work. And no Sterlinger who was there in these ware hose for.

there in those years has for-gotten it. There is a very acgotten it. Ihere is a very ac-tive group of ex-Sterlingers on Facebook today. In fact, last year when Sterling's first ever resort in Ko-daikanal celebrated 25 years since inception, a group of ex-Sterling em-ployees wrote to me and ployees wrote to me and asked for permission to or-ganise a celebration at the resort. They came from all leisure resort could create over the world! That should tell you what it was like being part of a company that was visionary and had a that was visionary and had a great people culture.

Despite all those achieve ments and phenomenal growth, where did the com-

growth, where did the com-pany go wrong so that it was away from the industry limelight for a long time? The rapid success Sterling tasted in vacation owner-ship sales led to kingsize ambitions. Sterling started investing in land across the country, including a project in Greater Noda to develop two championship golf courses, an integrated tank. Timeshare sale's de-clined and Sterling began to struggle with each flows and mounting debt. Things went steadily downhull from there for a good 12 years be-fore Sidharth Subramarian & Sid Mehta started the res-cue act. It was a difficult ear for the company but one thing that must be high-lighted is that Sterling's commitment to its memcourses, an integrated sports complex and golf vil-las. No less than the fa-Ias. No less than the fa-thing that must be high-towus goller. Greg Norman, lighted is that Sterling's was appointed for the de-sign of the golf course. Ster-ling sunk in substantial funds for a project that was

> What was the key factor ■ What was the key factor that made you to look at a life outside Sterling and join hands with Mahindra Group -- to the extent that the diversified group even decided to base Mahindra Holidays out of Chennai, einee wu and wour team since you and your team were based in the city? Crown.

int in my career when I felt ready to head a company. I guess my passion for the timeshare business led the timeshare business led to my joining hands with the Mahindra Group to found Club Mahindra. As for setting up in Chennai, it was primarily due to my love for the city! From a business perspective, too. Chennai made sense as Sterling had built a strong timeshare market in the timeshare market in the south, making it an easier market to penetrate.

What again was the key factor that made you to take a fresh look at Sterling and return to your base? I had already left Club Mahindra and was enjoying a sabbatical when Sid Mahin Sterling's chairman

Mehta, Sterling's chairman, approached me and said, "Ramesh, you have an in-complete job to finish. Come back and finish it." Like all ex-Sterlingers, I had an emotional attachment to the company. I also knew that the vacation ownership industry had yet to realise its potential and that Ster-ling had some great assets. I joined Sterling in July I joined Sterling in July 2011 and as I look back over the last two-and-a-half vears, I do so with a sense of

■ What is the way forward for vacation ownership or timeshare industry in India? Not many are keen to be tied down with one to be tied down with one network. The way forward promises to be very exciting now that Indians have discovered the joy of travel. Gone are the annual vacatione, and annual vacations and VFR's, replaced by multiple holidays, both domestic and abroad. The network offered by Sterling is large and fered by Sterling is large and growing. Plus, there is al-ways the possibility of holi-daying in over 4,000-plus overseas destination through Resort Condomini-um International (RCI), opening up resorts around opening up resorts around the world. A timeshare membership makes sense not just financially and emotionally but also in terms of comfort and safety
